Program presented by retired general manager

BOWLING Green State University entered the world of educational television broadcasting in February of 1964 with black and white television transmission and with low power. It's been a story of educational service and growth since then. After numerous technological transitions, WBGU-TV has completed its transition to digital and high definition broadcasting.

Patrick Fitzgerald, who was part of the WBGU-TV team at BGSU for 37 years, will share the story of WBGU-TV on Wednesday, March 23, at the BGSU Retirees Assn. Luncheon at Stone Ridge Golf Club, Muirfield Drive, Bowling Green.

During the years into the digital era, Pat "Fitz" led the station as the General Manager of WBGU-TV until his retirement last June.

Born in Cleveland and raised in Parma, Fitz earned a bachelor's degree at the University of Dayton and master's degrees at Dayton and Brooklyn College of City University of New York.

After teaching at St. Joseph's College in Rensselaer, Ind., and Hunter College, New York City, Fitz joined WBGU-TV as a producer-director in 1972. Next he was director of Television Learning Services, responsible for the direction and development of instructional television and distance learning support for BGSU.

In 1990, Fitz was named director of television services and general manager of WBGU-TV. □

• Ralph Wolfe, at home in North Baltimore

And the Oscar goes to . . .

Ralph Wolfe, the ultimate Lillian Gish movie fan, for his dogged persistence and unbridled enthusiasm that has left a distinguished mark on BGSU, both in the classroom and in theater and film

By Clif Boutelle

A SELF-PROFESSED homebody, Ralph Haven Wolfe has spent nearly his entire life in Wood County, having been born in Weston and growing up in North Baltimore, where he still lives.

He also has spent a lot of his time in Hanna Hall, where his friendship with film star Lillian Gish has led to the creation of the Lillian and Dorothy Gish Film Theater, drawing national recognition to Bowling Green University.

From his small-town roots, he has led a rich and varied career that has left an indelible legacy on his hometown and at Bowling Green State University.

As a youngster, Wolfe had two primary interests—going to the library and to the movies. “I probably saw every movie that came to our local theater,” he recalls, “and I spent a lot of time at the library, where I was enthralled with the world of books.” In fact, they turned into his life’s work and he couldn’t be happier.

• President Hollis Moore approved the nomination of Lillian Gish for an honorary degree for her lifetime of work in movies on condition that Gish would come to the campus to receive the honor. The degree was awarded in 1976 with the dedication of the Lillian and Dorothy Gish Film Theater. The last appearance of Lillian Gish came in 1982, when her good friend and 1946 BGSU graduate and Academy Award-winning actress (“On the Waterfront”) Eva Marie Saint was presented an honorary degree (above). In 1953 Saint starred with Gish in “The Trip to Bountiful,” a live TV broadcast.

promoting film as an art form on our campus, but to provide students, faculty, and community patrons alike with a wonderful facility for screening films, teaching film courses, and inviting a variety of renowned speakers to help us reflect upon the art of film,” said Brett Holden, assistant professor of film studies and associate curator of the Gish Film Theater, perhaps one of Wolfe’s most significant achievements.

He graduated from North Baltimore High School in 1948 and entered Bowling Green that Fall majoring in English and French and Spanish. He completed his degree in three years and began a master’s program which was interrupted by a two-year stint in the Army.

Upon his discharge, he continued his master’s studies at BGSU in English and French, while also finding time to teach at Montgomery Local High School in Wayne, Ohio, for a year.

Setting his sights on teaching at the university level, he enrolled in a doctoral program at Indiana University, earning his Ph.D. in English and French in 1960. He then taught a semester at Bowling Green before becoming an assistant professor at Monmouth College in Illinois. A year later he joined the faculty at Indiana State University, where he taught for five years.

MEANWHILE his parents bought a home on Main Street in North Baltimore, fulfilling a dream of Wolfe’s mother. “It was a home she always wanted to live in, and when it went on the market, my father said he would buy it for her and he did.” That was in 1959 and it is where Wolfe currently lives.

He has played a prominent role in North Baltimore, serving on various committees and even performing in some productions of the North Baltimore Repertory Company (as well as with the Black Swamp Players and BGSU Theater). He has devoted much of his attention to the North Baltimore Library and served on its board for 35 years and played a key role in the creation of the Wolfe Community Room as well as the Wolfe Collection of Film, Television and Theatre.

Lesley McKinstry, director of the North Baltimore Public Library for the past nearly 11 years, calls Wolfe “a very kind and generous man,” who is “a real asset to our library. He has been a tremendous help in reaching our goals through his involvement, his knowledge and his monetary donations as well as items from his personal collections for the newly created television and movie section.”

In 1967, his father passed on, and Wolfe returned to North Baltimore to help his mother. “I was very fortunate because at that time there was an opening in the English Department, and Stan Coffman, who was chair at the time, hired me.” His specialty was 19th century romantic literature, prose and poetry.

His longtime interest in movies and the theater took on a new dimension when Mike Marsden and Jack Nachbar, both of whom taught in the popular culture program, started a Film Studies Advisory Committee, which led to the creation of the Journal of Popular Film and Television. Wolfe wrote numerous articles for the journal, which gained a national reputation, and served as the journal’s book review editor for 20 years from 1975-95.

As interest in film studies grew on campus, a classic movie series was begun, thanks to the efforts of Dick Lenhart, then director of the Union Activities Organization. “The movies were shown in a lecture room in Hanna Hall, and I thought it should have a name and suggested we name it after Lillian Gish, a native Ohioan who began her career in nearby Risingsun, when she appeared in a production there at the age of five.”

Wolfe had a picture book featuring Lillian and Dorothy Gish and contacted the book’s editor, James Frasher of New York City. “As it turned out, he was Lillian’s manager and said he would tell her about the honorary degree and naming the theater in her honor and ask if she would come to Bowling Green. We were thrilled when she said she would be happy to come to the campus.”

However, she had a condition: that the theater’s name include her younger sister, Dorothy, who had died in 1968, a successful actress in her own right and who appeared in several movies with Lillian. And so the official name became the Dorothy and Lillian Gish Film Theater.

Interviews for research sought from recently retired women employees

By Linda Hamilton

DR. ELLEN BROIDO, an associate professor in BGSU’s Department of Higher Education and Student Affairs (HESA), is conducting a research study of women who have worked for BGSU for 25 years or more.

She is interested in our experiences as women and how those experiences changed over time. Participants will complete a face-to-face audio-taped interview.

The interview takes about one hour covers participants’ work experiences at BGSU and a little about their lives. Interviews will be conducted at a time and place of your choosing. Information will remain confidential. The interviewee’s name will be changed in the written transcript, and changes may be made on any information in the transcripts. The research will be used in conference presentations and will be published.

Dr. Broido has been on the HESA faculty since 2001. She received her Ed.D. from Penn State University, her M.S. in education from Indiana University, and a B.A. from Columbia College of Columbia University. Her research interests are in social justice allies, diversity education, students with disabilities, lesbian-gay-bisexual and transsexual (LGBS) student issues, and qualitative approaches to research.

Those interested in participating in the study may contact Dr. Broido at ebroido@bgsu.edu or (419) 372-9391. Any faculty, administrative staff or classified staff woman may participate as long as retirement was within the past 2-3 years. Dr. Broido hopes to complete all the interviewed by the end of February. □

THINGS were really popping during exam week last December at the William T. Jerome Library. The University Libraries Department of Teaching & Learning wanted to help students during the challenging exam week by alleviating their stress . . . with popcorn!

Members of the department set time aside during exam week to serve freshly popped popcorn in the library lobby. Students and other staff received an unexpected special treat from the librarians along with some holiday cheer.

The popcorn machine was purchased for the University Libraries by a gracious anonymous donor. It is used throughout the year for several events including the President's Day Open House, National Library Week, Family Campaign and various staff events.

THE BLADE

✓ LEGISLATION changing provisions of the state's five statewide public pension plans, including STRS Ohio and the Ohio Public Employees Retirement System, was introduced Feb. 1 by Rep. Lynn Wachtmann (R-Napoleon) as House Bill 69. The plan does not include an increase in employer contributions and includes changes that bring the funding period for STRS Ohio pensions to no more than 30 years. These include raising member contributions and cutting benefits.

A placeholder bill addressing pension reform, Senate Bill 3, also was introduced Feb. 1, by Sen. Keith Faber (R-Celina).

Wachtmann said he would like to see pension legislation enacted concurrently with the budget and completed by July 1. Click the following link to view the STRS plan: <https://www.strsoh.org/pdfs/40-305.pdf>. Provisions are still being debated.

Highlights of House Bill 69 for STRS (470,000 members):

- Increase employee contribution rate, currently at 10 percent.
- Increase minimum retirement age; STRS Board is considering minimum of 60 after 30 years; current is any age after 30 years.
- Calculate benefits on average salary over five years instead of three.
- Reduce future cost-of-living adjustments for current retirees and reduce and defer such payments for new retirees.

Highlights of House Bill 69 for OPERS (1 million members):

- Raise minimum requirements for retirement with full benefits at 55 years with at least 32 years service.
- Tie cost-of-living adjustments to the federal inflation index capped at 3% compared to the current flat rate of 3%.
- Calculate benefits based on average salary over five years instead of three.
- For sheriffs and other law enforcement members, raise minimum retirement age by two years to 54 with 25 years of service or 64 with 15. Also for court bailiffs and other public safety members.

Highlights of House Bill 69 for Police and Fire Retirement System (54,000 members):

- Raise normal minimum requirements for retirement age from 48 to 52 for new hires only. Benefits based on average five years.
- Increase member contributions from 10% to 12.5%.
- Delay cost-of-living adjustments to 55 except for current retirees.

Highlights of House Bill 69 for School Employees Retirement System (192,000 members):

- Increase by two years minimum retirement ages for full benefits by those retiring after Aug. 1, 2015, to 67 with 10 years on the job or 57 with 30 years; for reduced benefits, age 62 with 10 years or 60 with 25.

- Jan. 27 edition

✓ SPAIN upped its retirement age from 65 to 67 to reassure jittery markets that the country can handle its heavy debt burden. The nation's Cabinet approved the increase.

- Jan. 29 edition

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

✓ THE FEDERAL insider-trading robe is being felt by the School Employees Retirement System of Ohio, which invested in two hedge funds raided as part of the investigation. As soon as news of those raids broke, executives of the pension fund flew to New York to question the two firms, Level Global Investors and Diamondback Capital Management.

- Jan. 24 edition

✓ ARKANSAS has sued State Street Corp., expanding the investigation into whether banks overcharged public pension funds by tens of millions of dollars for foreign-exchange transactions. The suit in federal court in Massachusetts, which seeks class-action status, alleges that Boston-based State Street for more than a decade violated state law by overcharging many customers for currency trades. The Arkansas system, with $11 billion in assets, has more than 115,000 active and retired members.

- Feb. 11 edition

✓ CITY FATHERS in Pittsburgh, Pa., will need a Hail Mary pass to save the city pension system. By relying on outdated actuarial tables, making only minimum payments and failing to limit benefits as the number of active workers paying into plans fell, Pittsburgh has accumulated a $700-million unfunded liability. Its 29.5% funding level is among the lowest in the U.S.

- Feb. 5-6 edition

✓ AN EDITORIAL noted pension reform in Utah as a model. The system last March replaced defined benefit pensions with a 401(k)-style plan for or new state and municipal workers. In 2008, the fund lost 22% of its assets. From nearly 100% funded in 2007, it fell to 70% funded by 2009. The state was assuming a 7.75 annual return on investment, but actuaries found that if that return fell to only 6%, the system would be technically insolvent.

✓ AS RECORD numbers of high school students are taking the Advanced Placement exam, a rising percentage are scoring at the lowest level possible, according to national data on 2010 graduates released Feb. 9. Students posted 1's, the lowest possible score, on 23% of all AP exams. Ten years ago, that number stood at 14%, according to the College Board.

Yoga

I HAVE been engaged in the practice of yoga for about eight years. Yoga, an ancient discipline originating in India, is associated with meditative practices in Hinduism, Buddhism and Jainism. All of the many forms of yoga focus on the relationship of the body and mind. In the west, yoga is generally identified with hatha-yoga, developed in 15th century India and based on the principle that the purification of the body leads to the purification of the mind.

• Ramona Cormier

Since I am not Hindu, I practice yoga for its stretching exercises that make my body supple and hopefully more graceful in its movements. Also I appreciate the exercises that coordinate my breath, the life force of yoga, with body movements that calm the stress in my body. Yoga reminds me that there are parts of my physical being, particularly my neck, shoulders, and lower back, that need special care. It is through awareness of my body that

I come to purify my mind. Especially meaningful to me is the meditation time at the end of each yoga session when my body and mind are one.

I strongly recommend yoga. Try the practice. □

Wolfe has worked tirelessly to make the Gish Film Theater and Gallery one of the campus's crowning jewels. He created a national advisory committee co-chaired by Saint and actor Roddy McDowall, whom Wolfe brought to campus in 1995 when he was awarded an Honorary Doctor of Performing Arts degree.

Since 1989 Wolfe has been instrumental in raising more than $500,000 for the Gish Film Theater Endowment, and he initiated the Lillian Gish, and Eva Marie Saint Scholarships, both of which were endowed by the actresses. In addition, he endowed a scholarship in memory of his parents. To most, Wolfe's legacy at BGSU will be the creation of the Gish Film Theater and the Wolfe Video Viewing Center, which opened last fall, as well as his efforts in the development of the study of film and television.

NOT to be overlooked though is his work as a scholar and teacher. Though he has written numerous articles for various journals and been involved in numerous other scholarly activities, such as being one of the few American professors to take part in the Wordsworth Summer Conference in England, it is teaching students that he considers one of his major accomplishments. "I really enjoyed my relationship with students and helping them learn and develop," he said.

Recognition of his teaching contributions came when he was awarded the title of Distinguished Teaching Professor of English. In Faculty Senate, Wolfe served as chair, vice chair and secretary.

He formally retired from the University in 1998 but has not severed his ties, continuing as curator of the Gish Film Theater and Gallery. □
