Decolonizing Digital Cultural Memory: Digital Humanities as Digital Activism

Roopika Risam
Assistant Professor of English, Salem State University

March 31, 2017
308 Bowen-Thompson Student Union

WGSS Event Schedule
9-10:30 a.m. Research Presentations (Rooms 314, 315, 316 BTSU)
10:30 a.m. Research Presentations to Noon (Rooms 314, 315, 316 BTSU)
1 p.m. Dessert Reception (308 BTSU)
1:15 p.m. Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies (WGSS) Essay Winners Presentation (308 BTSU)
1:45 p.m. WGSS Feminist Falcon Awards/Research Award Winners (308 BTSU)
2 p.m. Keynote Presentation, Roopika Risam (308 BTSU)

About the Presentation
Roopika Risam examines the recent development of intersectional digital humanities projects that are pushing back against the status quo of knowledge production online and creating space for untold stories and unheard voices in cultural memory. In doing so, she identifies a set of practices that articulate a theory of activist digital humanities.

Sponsored by
The Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies Program and The Women’s Center

Co-Sponsored by
College of Arts and Sciences
Office of the Provost
Office of the VP for Student Affairs
School of Cultural and Critical Studies

Culture Club
Office of Multicultural Affairs
National Council of Negro Women
BG Section