SPRING 2010

Thursdays 2:30–3:25 P.M., Moseley Hall Room 400

February 4 Reading Effectively Across Disciplines

Learn how to dissect, understand, and recall all the readings assigned by your professors—and still sleep at night.

February 11 Writing Science Lab Reports

At this workshop, you'll build your skills at effectively reporting your lab processes, findings, and analyses in written format, as well as correctly incorporating graphs and data.

February 18 Commas, Colons, and Semi-colons Made Easy

Confused by commas and semi-colons? Not sure how to use a colon? At this workshop, you'll learn how to use these punctuation marks correctly.

February 25 Taking Essay Tests

Do you cringe at the thought of essay tests? Join us at this workshop and learn specific strategies for how to do your best on these kinds of tests.

March 4 Cover Letters: More than Your Resume in Prose

While resumes are important, cover letters are critical. Learn what to do and say in a cover letter to improve your chances of getting that interview.

March 18 Plagiarism: Defined and Declined

In this workshop, plagiarism will be discussed in detail as we define it, analyze it, and ultimately determine how to avoid it when writing academic papers.

March 25 Using Sources Effectively

Learn to use research effectively to support your ideas instead of allowing research to use you.

April 1 MLA Documentation

Writing a research paper in MLA style, but not sure what it is? Heard that it has changed recently and want an update? Join this workshop for answers.

April 8 APA Documentation

APA is the most common documentation style in American universities. However, it may seem to be ever-changing and confusing. Learn how to cite sources in APA style at this workshop.

April 15 Readings from Many Cultures

Bring a favorite poem or other piece of literature (in any language) to share with others as we celebrate writing from around the globe.
