

CTLT's Spring Semester 2006 Teaching Tip for April 5

An electronic communication medium that has recently been getting higher education's attention is podcasting. As with any new medium, everyone has different levels of understanding and exposure, so the Center has been gathering resources about podcasting's potential, educational applications and offer them as this week's teaching tip.

For a list of sources about podcasting, visit the following URL for EDUCAUSE:

http://www.educause.edu/Browse/645?PARENT_ID=788

We would recommend the EDUCAUSE Review Article, "There's Something in the Air: Podcasting in Education." Also, there is a quick reference article, "7 Things You Should Know About Podcasting."

Duke University Libraries has an excellent collection of URLs:

<http://www.lib.duke.edu/reference/pri/podcasts>

From this Web page you can link to public radio and government podcasts and podcast directories. Scroll down for the links that we recommend, Universities and Tutorial. Under the Universities section you can visit podcasting sites for Duke, Stanford, UC Berkeley, UCLA, and Purdue. These universities are in the beginning stage of podcast use. The Tutorial section has a single link to the University of Wisconsin – Madison, with information on podcasting: what it is, how to use it in teaching and learning, samples, and how to create and deliver podcasts.

One more learning opportunity—

BGSU will participate in an Ohio Learning Network Online Seminar about podcasting. Dan Madigan, Carrie Rathsack, Todd Pavlack, and Chris Browne are special guests with Mike Lieberman from the University of Cincinnati.

For more information, <http://www.teachuohio.org/>