Dr. Nick Hennessy

‘Greening’ of BGSU topic of May 8 lunch

SPEAKER for the May 8 luncheon of the BGSU Retirees Association will be Dr. Nick Hennessy, coordinator of BGSU’s Office of Campus Sustainability.

The luncheon, with registration at 11:30 a.m. and serving at noon, will be the last for the BGSURA at Stone Ridge Golf Club. The Sept. 9 Convocation, as well as other future luncheons, will be at the Bowling Green Country Club on Fairview Avenue.

The Sustainability Office, a department of BGSU Campus Operations, is committed to improving the efficiency of BGSU facilities, greening its practices and processes, and strengthening a culture of environmental stewardship for the entire university community.

Operating since the fall of 2008, the office places great importance on involving students, staff, faculty, and the local community in efforts to reduce consumption of resources and minimize our ecological footprint.
URING the early part of her career, it might be fair to say that Fiona MacKinnon was a bit of an academic vagabond. By her count, she worked at five different universities.

But all that changed in 1988 when she joined the Higher Education and Student Affairs Department at Bowling Green State University. “This has been home to me and I’ve been very happy here,” she said.

Bowling Green is a long way from the wee isle of Arran in the Firth of Clyde on the west coast of Scotland where she was born. Although she only lived there two years, she is proud of her Scottish heritage. When she was four, her family moved to Nottingham, England. Then, when she was 14, they emigrated to Cape Cod, Mass.

It wasn’t an easy adjustment for the newly enrolled freshman at Barnstable High School. “I had an English accent and felt so awkward among the American girls. They seemed so much more sophisticated than I. It was a difficult time. I tried purposely to lose the accent so I could fit in better.”

She hit her stride, though, when her family sent her to Northfield, a private school. “A satisfying and happy time,” she recalled.

From there she began her career in higher education with undergraduate work in English literature at Denison University. She continued with her master’s from the University of Bridgeport in Connecticut and her doctorate at Ohio State, where she also was assistant dean of students.

Her first few years at Bowling Green were primarily spent in the classroom, but she soon became active in university governance, first as a Faculty Senate member, then as chair in 1995. “A search for a new president of the university was underway at that time, which led to the appointment of Sidney Ribeau in the spring of 1995. That was an exciting time for Bowling Green,” she recalled.

Following her term on Faculty Senate, she served as provost associate with then-provost Chuck Middleton. During that time, she chaired the committee that created the Women’s Center and hired Mary Krueger as director. Later she was an associate dean in the College of Education and Human Development under Josué Cruz.

In the early 1990s she was appointed to the Gender Equity Committee, established by Faculty Senate. “The contributions of women are important to this university and it was an effort to bring greater equality to a deserving group of employees. Though there were some gains, by and large there was no monumental shift in equity.”

In 1996 she was awarded a six-month Fulbright to teach two graduate courses at a university in Beijing, China. “It was wonderful experience and I learned a lot about the adult learning opportunities provided by the Chinese.

In some ways they were ahead of what we were doing in this country.”

“I believe the Building Community effort was good for campus morale because it produced results and people became stakeholders as the University moved forward,” she said. “It captured energy throughout the campus.”

To capitalize on the good feeling generated by President Sidney Ribeau and his new administration, Fionna MacKinnon suggested to President Ribeau that it was an opportune time to initiate a program she called “Building Community: Moving Toward 2020 with a Vision.” It was designed to engage the entire University community in creating a future path for BGSU.

“President Ribeau agreed, and we moved forward with it. It was special in that it involved everyone: classified, administrative and faculty working together to come up with ideas. There were meetings throughout campus for several months that generated a wide variety of recommendations. The Board of Trustees implemented many of them. Especially helpful was the collaboration of Veronica Gold and Hal Lunde, the Senate’s secretary and vice president respectively. They played a major role in making the project successful,” she said.

She has been supportive of the park’s naturalist program, called “No Child Left Indoors,” an effort to introduce children to the wonders of the parks. “Parks add a wonderful quality of life to the community,” she said. She also volunteers as a Bluebird monitor at William Henry Harrison Park in Pemberville. “Being out in the park is something I like to do.” She also has done some volunteering at the Simpson Garden Park, helping maintain the entrance garden with Karen McFillen.

A believer in the adage, “You’re never too old,” she began taking piano lessons nine months ago. “It’s something I always wanted to do. Judy Miller is taking lessons and she inspired me to try it and we go to Bluffton for our lessons. We have a marvelous teacher, a Bowling Green master’s graduate, but that still did not stop me from being nervous at my first recital.”

A lifelong knitter, she belongs to the Knitwits, a group of women who meet on Thursdays at Grounds for Thought to work on knitting projects. “It’s something I learned from my grandmother and it’s a fun social activity with friends,” she said.

Like many retirees she has traveled. “I never really did a lot of traveling prior to retirement, other than trips back to the UK and my time in China. This year it will be the Baltic capitals, last year it was Italy, Malta and Sicily. The year before I visited the countries surrounding the Black Sea including Turkey, Georgia, Ukraine, Russia,” she said. Bhutan and India were also recent destinations.

During her professional career, Fiona MacKinnon made the most of the opportunities that came her way and in retirement she hasn’t missed a beat.

President’s Message

Dave Chilson may be reached at chilson@cs.bgsu.edu

In May e-mail will undergo another change for those who have Falcon Mail -- from Falcon Mail to Office 365, which is software built around the Microsoft Office platform. Emeritus faculty using bgsu.edu are not involved. Long-range plans are to have bgsu.edu available for all retirees.

Since this is the last BGSURA newsletter for this fiscal year, I want to thank all of the BGSURA officers, directors, and committee chairs for their many contributions to our Retirees Association. And a special “thank you” to Jim Gordon, who is stepping down as Newsletter Editor after eighteen years in this position.

Best wishes,

Dave Chilson

Good times

Attending the association’s March 8 “Late Winter Cocktail Party” were 23 BGSU retirees and guests, hosted by Ron and Sharon Gargasz at their Tanglewood Lane home. Sharing appetizers and beverages were Charlie Applebaum, Pat Fitzgerald, John and Georgia Folkins, Milt and Lee Hakel, Pat Koehler, Bill and Emily Lake, Paul and Joyce Mueller, Vic Norton and Kathleen Tweney, Tom and Barbara O’Brien, Wally and Diane Pretzer, Elmer and Elaine Spreitzer, Dave Chilson, and Ralph Wolfe.

Ron and Sharon’s living-room has high ceilings featuring varied art works by Robert Mazur, Maurice Sevigny, Paul Running, and Nancy Wilkoff Leetch, all well-known BG artists. The hosting went well beyond official responsibilities to offer an opportunity to taste a variety of single malt scotches to those interested.

BGSURA cocktail parties allow those who attend wonderful opportunities to meet new people and see old friends with whom to share conversations. If you would like to host one, contact Pat Koehler at 419-352-6180 or pkoeher@woh.rr.com. Think of having a “Late Spring Cocktail Party” this spring or summer.
