

Written and Oral Communication Skills Requirement

Economics Department

There is a written and oral communications form attached that will need to be submitted to the Economics department office with the professor's signature. Signature by professor indicates that the requirements have been satisfied. While we will accept one course for both the oral and written requirement, the department's preference is to have two different courses used for these requirements.

Written Communications Requirement:

The written communication requirement can be fulfilled by one of the following:

- An economics course in which a paper (or other significant writing such as on exams) is required, or
- an economics readings course where the major outcome is a paper, or
- an economics course where you agree with the professor to write a paper.

Oral Communications Requirement:

The oral communication requirement can be fulfilled by one of the following:

- oral presentation in an economics class or
- class participation in an economics class.

There is an oral and written communications form attached that is to be submitted to the department office with the professor's signature. Signature by professor indicates that the requirement has been satisfied. Typically, signatures are made after the course has ended. If near completion of a requirement to the professor's satisfaction, signatures can be obtained before the end of the course to accommodate graduating seniors.
