The National Center for Family & Marriage Research (NCFMR) at Bowling Green State University (BGSU) has been leading the nation in research on U.S. families since 2007. The Center's original research on family trends and well-being appears in top academic journals and research briefs on the NCFMR website. The provocative findings from this research are regularly featured in national media outlets as summarized below for 2015. National news reporters now consistently rely on the expertise of the NCFMR to develop their stories on key family changes, such as same-sex marriage, divorce, childlessness, grandparenthood gender dynamics in marriage, and cohabitation. The NCFMR has vaulted BGSU onto the national media stage, firmly establishing our position as the leading source for the latest news on what's happening to American families. This achievement brings sustained visibility to BGSU at the local, state, national, and even international levels.
