New Data on the Impact of Incarceration on Families

New research from FWD.us and Cornell University examines the important but often overlooked aspects of over-incarceration in America, and how its impact extends beyond the prison walls on to the families on the other side. <https://everysecond.fwd.us/about/>.

Postdoctoral Fellowships in Population Health Science

The Population Health Science Training Program at the University of Minnesota, housed in the Minnesota Population Center, features cross-training in the biology and etiology of disease as well as in the social sciences. The program is designed to integrate trainees from diverse disciplinary backgrounds and prepare them to have outstanding careers as population health scientists. More about the program is at this link: <https://pop.umn.edu/training/postdoctoral>
