

National Survey of Student Engagement (NSSE) High-Impact Practices (HIPs) Participant Dashboard Comparisons

High-Impact Practices (HIP) are undergraduate experiences and activities that have been found to increase student engagement, learning, and success in college. The tables below illustrate the percentages (%) and the differences in those percentages (%) of BGSU first-year and senior student participation in High-Impact Practices (HIPs) and of first-year and senior students at other universities within the same Carnegie* class.

*Carnegie Classifications are a way to classify and identify colleges and universities in the US that are roughly the same type. BGSU is a doctoral university with higher research activity. In the tables above, BGSU student scores are compared against other students at the same type of institutions across the country within that Carnegie Class (doctoral universities with higher research activity) that also took the NSSE.
